Veja a entrevista:

Which the main objectives of the CIES related to the soccer are?

The goal is to follow up the evolution of the football players' labour market from a demographic perspective, and put at the disposal of all interested parties reliable, objective and comparable statistics.

That it is Professional Football Players Observatory (PFPO)?

In 2011, the Professional Football Players Observatory was renamed CIES Football Observatory within the context of the broader CIES Observatory's project dedicated to the statistical analysis of sport in all its diversity.

As the CIES Football Observatory can help in the planning of the soccer?

Our data are very useful for the governing bodies insofar they support them in various decision-making processes related to hot topics such as international transfers, protection of minors, income redistribution, transfer fees, etc.

Already comment some interesting results identified by the developed work for the one CIES Football Observatory

We have for example statistically demonstrated that leaving his home country as a minor is often detrimental to the footballer's mid and long-term career prospects. The best age range to leave his country of origin is situated between 20 and 23 years of age, once the player has already consistent professional experience in his home country.

Is Brazil the country with more number of players "do you expatriate"? Which the importance?

For that that disparity front the other countries?

Brazil remains the most exporting country towards big-5 league European championships (about 130 players in 98 teams, more than one per team) ahead of Argentina and France. The same holds true if we take into account 33 top division European leagues (about 500 Brazilians). However, in both cases the trend is negative, which reflects the tendency for Brazilians to stay longer in their home country, or more and more often experiencing return migration. This is related to the economic development of Brazil and Brazilian football.
